Next-door neighbors and ex-best friends Hannah and Emory havenâ€™t spoken in months. Not since the fightâ€™the one where they said things they couldnâ€™t take back.

Now, Emory is fine-tuning her UCLA performing arts application and trying to make the most of the months she has left with her boyfriend, Luke, before they head off to separate colleges. Meanwhile, Hannahâ€™s strong faith is shaken when her familyâ€™s financial problems come to light, and she finds herself turning to unexpected placesâ€™and peopleâ€™for answers to the difficult questions sheâ€™s suddenly facing.

No matter how much Hannah and Emory desperately want to bridge the thirty-six steps between their bedroom windows, they canâ€™t. Not anymore.

Until their paths cross unexpectedly when, one night, Hannah finds Luke doubled over in his car outside her house. In the aftermath of the accident, all three struggle to understand what happened in their own ways. But when a devastating secret about Hannah and Emoryâ€™s argument ultimately comes to light, they must all reexamine the things they hold true.

In alternating chapters, a skeptic and a believer piece together the story of their complex relationship and the boy caught somewhere in the middle. New York Times best-selling author Tamara Ireland Stone deftly crafts a moving portrait of faith, love, and friendship.
